Reagan Extends Grain Sales As 'Favor' to U.S. Farmers

WASHINGTON -- President Reagan, in a move certain to please U.S. farmers but rile European allies, said Friday that he will accept another one-year extension of the U.S. agreement to sell wheat and corn to the Soviet Union.

The White House forecast, even before it was officially released, had been labeled unrealistic by Mr. Reagan's top economist, Murray L. The midyear budget review also predicted the deficit for fiscal 1982, which ends Sept. 30, will grow to a record $108.9 billion, $8.4 billion more than the administration had estimated two months ago and more than double the $45 billion figure the president used when he came into office.

Palestinians Say UN Relief to Southern Lebanon Deprives West Beirut

Washington Post Service BEIRUT - The Palestine Liberation Organization has prevented food supplies stored in a United OUZAI, Lebanon — Yasser Arafat, the Palestine Liberation Organization chairman was out touring the PLO's front-line bunker here the other day when one of the fighters leaning behind a red dirt barricade asked him whether it was true that the PLO was withdrawing from Beirut.

"What do you think?" Mr.
Arafat asked him in his typically evasive manner

"I think that if you order us to withdraw I will shoot you with this gun," the guerrilla said.

Mr. Arafat chuckled, probably because he realized that this simple soldier had captured his problem: bow to negotiate an honorable withdrawal of the PLO from Lebanon that can be sold to his fighters, and history, as a victory.

The guerrillas insist that they will abide by whatever political decision is made by the PLO leadership. But in the same breath they insist — and are told every day in the PLO newspaper Filistin al-Thawra and radio Voice of Palestine - that the only place the guerrillas will withdraw to is "Palestine." They understand this to mean they will leave Beirut only in return for a political concession that advances the Palestinian Majid, a 28-year-old guerrilla based in Position 1, was asked what he thought of the proposal by Philip C. Habib, the U.S. special envoy to the Middle East, that the PLO fighters leave Beirut by bus, go to Syria and then be dispersed to different Arab countries.

"I don't understand your question." he said. "You mean we pull out without anything in return?"

"Let me explain to you something," he continued, cradling a Kalashnikov in his lap. "The Israelis could let the PLO withdraw from Beirut with every single gun it has, but if it is without anything political, it would be the death of the PLO. If we stay here and fight as we have for 55 days, and even die, at least the Palestinian cause will have some meaning and remain alive."

If Mr. Arafat is planning to make any concessions to Mr. Habib, whereby the PLO would agree to a "nonpolitical" evacuation from Beirut, no one has told the fighters about it and no effort has enough canned food and rice to been made by the PLO to prepare last for six months and insisted

The administration's victories were an indication that, while debate continues over exactly how large the military buildup should be, the president has prevailed with his basic argument that military outlays must be increased even in a time of domestic spending cuts.

U.S. Repeats Intention To Punish Companies That Break Sanctions

WASHINGTON - A Reagan administration official reiterated Friday the United States' determination to punish violators of its Soviet pipeline sanctions, but said that Washington expected that lew, if any, companies would defy

JERUSALEM — The Israeli
Army, in its lightning advance through Lebanon to the outskirts of Beirut, captured an impressive store of Soviet- and Americanmade weapons from retreating Palestine Liberation Organization forces, possibly enough to arm a lightly equipped infantry division.

Although some of the weapons were captured in combat, most were found abandoned in hidden arms caches that proved no use to the guerrillas in the face of the rapid Israeli advance.

It still is not clear why the PLO had stockpiled so many weapons. Some Israeli officials suggest that the PLO might have been planning major offensive that was prevented by the Israeli attack. Others think the guerrillas simply acquired the arms because they were ivailable on the international market and because Saudi Arabia and other countries were willing to pay

In any event, the pile of captured weapons has given Israel an opportunity for both economic and public relations gains. The government has said it is

In addition, of course, some PLO weapons were destroyed on the battlefield and the retreating guerrillas took as many as they could with them to West Beirut.

Most of the captured arms were produced in the Soviet Union and other Communist countries but there was a sprinkling of British, West German and American arms, including some M-16 automatic rifles and ammunition still in packing cases with shipping labels showing that they were sent origi-nally to Saudi Arabia.

Judging from the list, the PLO was better equipped than most guerrilla organizations but not as well as a modern army. Although the figures issued by the military command are impressive, some Israeli officials have implied that many more weapons were involved.

'Five Divisions'

For instance, Mr. Begin recently told a group of American contributors to the United Jewish Appeal. "In one field we captured an amount of weapons that ought to be given to 15 brigades — in other words, to five divisions."

Depending on the country, a division ranges from about 12,000 to about 17,000 men, so five divisions would have a minimum of 60,000 troops. The captured arms listed in the inventory, if given to such a force, would average out to less than one light weapon for every two men, about one hand grenade for every three and just over one tank for every 1,000.

Zeev Schiff, military correspondent for the newspaper Ha'aretz, recently wrote that some accounts of the extent of the captured arms were "reminiscent of 'A Thousand and One Nights.' " "This is a rich and variegated booty, but to say that it is sufficient to fully equip live divisions would be misleading." Mr. Schiff wrote. "It might perhaps suffice to arm one division with the latest small arms only.

Of the 25,000 light arms, about 10,000 were top-of-the-line Soviet AK-47 assault rifles. In addition,

Begin Suggestion

Mr. Begin suggested earlier, in a speech to parliament, that the PLO may have been storing Soviet weapons for possible use by the Soviet Army in the event of a superpower showdown in the Middle East. That seems unlikely, howevbecause the weapons listed in the inventory clearly would be considered obsolete by the Soviet

It also seems unlikely that the PLO ever thought it could take on the Israeli Army in conventional warfare. Mr. Schiff wrote that a force equipped with the captured weaponry "does not constitute a danger to the existence of the state of Israel ... It should not be for-gotten that the IDF [Israel De-fense Force] destroyed the terrorists' military infrastructure in Lebanon, not single-handed but with half a hand."

Eliahu Ben-Elissar, chairman of the Defense and Foreign Affairs Committee of the Israeli parlia-ment and a close associate of Mr. Begin, said in a recent interview that the PLO probably bought arms simply because it could afford them.

U.S. Bill May Ease Way For Big Foreign Sales By Private Arms Firms

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - A bill quietly enacted last week by the Flouse of Representatives has begin to open the way for large commercial sales of American arms to foreign nations, including $1 billion worth of arms to India

The immediate beneficiary of the measure, which seems likely to be approved by the Senate later this year, would be the Bowen McLanghim York Co. of York, Pa. The company, a spokesman said, has been negotiating with India to sell $1 billion worth of artillery.

ammunition and equipment. The legislation was not directly connected with the visit of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, but U.S. officials said arms sales to India would be discussed. The Reagan administration has emphasized se-curity assistance to friendly na-

The Bowen McLaughlin York spokesman said the company had offered to sell to India 200 self-propelled 155mm howitzers and 200 towed 155mm howitzers, along with ammunition and spare parts. Howitzers of that caliber are replacing 105mm howitzers as the standard artillery of the U.S.

The self-propelled guns, with a crew of six in an armored, tracked carrier, can fire high-explosive, chemical or nuclear rounds nearly 15 miles (24 kilometers). The towed guns, with a crew of 13, can

The initial sale, if the negotiations are successful, would be worth about $200 million. But continuing sales, service and spare parts would eventually make the contract worth about $1 billion, the spokesman said.

Streamlining the Process

He said the company also has begun discussions with Belgium, Canada, Egypt, South Korea, Ni-gena and Norway.

The main feature of the arms sales bill would be to streamline the arms sale process, according to Congressional officials. The measure was introduced by Rep. William F. Goodling, Republican of Pennsylvania, who represents the district in which Bowen McLaughlin York is simuted.

The legislation would help other U.S. companies trying to sell weapons abroad as well. It permits the weapons makers to buy components from government arse-nals assemble them into finished weapons and sell them under licenses approved by the State De-partment to a foreign government. Previously, commercial arms makers were prohibited from sell-ing arms with government-made parts to foreign nations unless the buyer went through a long and cumbersome process of obtaining a foreign military sales agreement covering components made in government arsenals.

Like foreign military sales by the government, commercial arms sales must be approved by Congress. The State Department notifies the Congress of the pending sale, which goes ahead unless Congress vetoes it within 30 days.

Rep. Goodling said that under present rules, "Government-owned and operated facilities cannot support commercial defense plants on Soviet tanks acquired last year, are strictly for de-fensive purposes in a hostile environment in which Nicaragna's Sandinista leaders say they must equal or surpass the combined strength of all other regular Central American armies in order to protect their leftist revolution.

He said the range of the planes would be limited. "We're not going to bomb Washington," he added.

Mr. Ortega set no timetable for the arrival of the planes, saying it would depend largely on the development of a capability to handle them, including training of pilots.

West Germany, Italy and other West and East European countries have been approached as sources of arms and aircraft. He said his government is working hard to strike a deal with France for the acquisition of Mirage fighters, possibly to be integrated in an air force that also would include MiGs.

He added that under the previous regime in Ni-caragua, from which the Sandmistas seized a handful of aircraft, the orientation was toward guerrilla warfare, not fighting off an invasion.

According to Mr. Ortega, Nicaragua's air defense consists of conventional anti-aircraft batteries supplemented in some areas by shoulder-fired heatseeking missiles. He declined to say where they were manufactured.

The Sandinista army has been transformed in three years from a guerrilla force of less than 5,000 into a force of about 25,000 regulars. Mr. Ortega as well as U.S. military analysts in Panama said the size of the army has not grown substantially in more than a year, but the level of training, logistical and tactical skills is improving dramatically.

WASHINGTON — The Reagan

administration's economic assistance plan for the Caribbean basin suffered another reversal when a carefully crafted bipartisan agreement to push it through the House of Representatives died on a point of parliamentary procedure.

The compromise that would have added $350 million to a 1982 supplemental appropriation went down to defeat Thursday because authorizing legislation had not yet passed the House.

The bill would have included at least $75 million for El Salvador, the largest beneficiary. The administration says the aid is necessary to rescue El Salvador from an economic morass as it resists leftist

The crucial point of order was raised by Rep. George Miller, Democrat of California, and others who objected in part to the way the money would have been divided. The House Foreign Affairs Committee had endorsed the $350million authorization but it had never been sent to the floor.

Assessing Bechtelmania

Beatlemania. Now we have Bechtelmania the concern you hear voiced about this giant construction company that seems to be stocking the upper reaches of government the way a fish hatchery stocks the Columbia River. What is the object of this concern?

What sort of company is Bechtel? Secretive, for one thing, Based in San Francisco and entirely owned by the Bechtel family and top executives, Bechtel does not have to disclose how much money it makes or how much it pays its 120,000 employees.

Successful, for another. Despite the secrecy, there is reason to believe that Bechtel is very profitable and very good at what it sets out to do: build things — big things, like nu-clear power plants, new cities in Saudi Arabia, much of Washington's Metro subway system. Bechtel constructed Hoover Dam and the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, the Transarabian Pipeline and the government buildings of Brunei.

Should Bechtel's business activities give cause to worry about its alumni and associates in government? The company's extensive dealings with Saudi Arabia and other Arab countries have led some people to doubt whether George Shultz or Caspar Weinberger or W. Kenneth Davis (who is deputy secretary of energy) or Middle East negotiator Philip Habib can be disinterested about

There has been nothing quite like it since American policy in the Middle East. But we Beatlemania. Now we have Bechtelmania — think their Middle East policies should be assessed on the merits, not on the basis of Bechtel's presumed views. Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger have proved their integrity in some of the most difficult circumstances public officials have ever faced. Mr. Habib's disinterest has the implicit endorsement of the parties whose conflicts he is mediating.

We find it more interesting to ponder the possible effect of the scope of Bechtel's operations on these men's views. Bechtel's work extends around the world. Its main competitors are foreign companies. Its main customers are local and foreign governments and large corporations, not individual consumers. Probably the majority of its business is out-side the United States.

We certainly don't think there is material for imputing some sort of conspiracy here, any more than when President Carter appointed to high office several ahumni of the Trilateral Commission, or earlier administra-tions leaned so heavily on Midwest-based industrial companies for their top businessman appointees — from Charles E. Policy for El Salvador

From THE NEW YORK TIMES

This much is palpable in the "certification" debate over El Salvador. Progress is in the eyes of the beholder. At the State Department, they have looked at what President Reagan candidly calls "un-fortunate things" and decided it could be worse. So the administration has again certified that El Salvador is making progress in curbing human rights abuses and promoting economic reforms, the key conditions Congress has set for continued military aid. This certification process is not quite the sham that Connecticut's Senator Christopher Dodd perceives. But neither does it achieve its purpose of shaping American policy toward El Salvador. In truth, there is not much of a policy besides giving "our" side enough bullets to deny victory to leftist guer-rillas, while keeping a hodgepodge regime afloat. The certificate is no substitute for a strategy that would deny bullets to reactionaries whose brutality and land grabbing frustrate political accommodation. On this central point, the State Department's certification report is artfully equivo-cal. For example, is the toll of political violence rising? The report says the murder rate has declined "somewhat" - "according to available statistics." State relies on newspaper accounts whose completeness is challenged by human rights groups. Still, to its credit, it includes those contrary judgments.

Ambiguities are admitted also on the subject of land reform. But the report stresses the good faith of President Magaña while discreetly playing down the role of Assembly President D'Aubuisson, who stands accused by one of the program's key U.S. planners, Roy Prosterman, of leading a "virtual coup d'état" against land reform.

But if the report is equivocal, so is the mood in Congress. Senator Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas is a barometric figure. Early this year she joined Dodd to persuade the Senate to chop $100 million from the requested $166 million in military aid. But she remains unwilling to cut aid completely and forfeit the battle to the guerrillas.

These periodic certifications cannot be directly rejected by Congress. But it can crossexamine the authors and then alter the foreign aid bills, possibly reducing appropriations or adding new conditions for their dis-bursement. This is a second-best way to run a foreign policy. Salvadorans are right to question whether Congress can really decide at long distance and in detail how best to promote human rights and social justice.

The highly successful March 28 election was plainly intended to impress Congress with El Salvador's progress toward democracy. Yet the results of that election strengthened extremists whose policies might well nullify the gain. So there can be no letup in the effort to use the considerable U.S. leverage to promote social peace and justice in a country that has had pitifully little of either. If the administration could for once convince Congress that this is truly its purpose, at least

By Any and All Means?

Even if it is true that the PLO, given the bitterness of a dispossessed people and the divisions of a disperate organization, has refused to recognize the Jewish state in the "clear and unequivocal" way that Washington wants; even if, in its Beirut stronghold it intersperses its fighters among civilians who are not a party to the conflict; even if it constituted outsized arms dumps in southern Lebanon — its "final" destruction (an improbable outcome in any event) does not warrant any and all means.

It does not warrant the razing of camps in which most of the 400,000 civilian Palestinian refugees in Lebanon made do in pitiful conditions; or the interning without the slightest guarantees of thousands of so-called suspects; or the death of women and children by the hundreds in the flames of West Beirut for the mere reason that they were presumed to be living alongside guerrillas. The infernal logic into which Mr. Begin has locked himself is the one that led so many authorities before him from realism to cynicism and from what is defensible to what is odious. It was perfectly understandable that he should want to dispel the threat against the villages of northern Galilee; it was toler-able that he should try to exploit his initial successes, encouraged as he was by the applause of some of those whom he aimed to "liberate" from the burdensome Palestinian presence. But now the machine has bolted. It has gone mad. Here we have the Lebanese state invaded and humiliated, the better to be restored; half of Beirut being flattened by bombs, so that its trials may cease; hundreds of civilians killed - as happened previously

Squabbling Over Steel

We now risk a period of tit-for-tat retaliation. It is a game which the politicians and officials will have the greatest difficulty controlling. The dispute [over steel exports] shows how fragile the GATT-built world trading system has become and how recessionary pressures in the industrialized countries are making possible a return to the beggar-thy-neighbor policies of the 1930s.

There are rights and wrongs on both sides. It is true that the Europeans do subsidize their steel exports. But nothing like as much as the Americans would have it. But if subsidies are against the GATT code, then so are the sort of quotas which the Americans seek to impose. What is needed are cool heads, a clarifying and tightening up of GATT rules and, above all, a commitment

NOW HOW DO I BACK OUTTA THIS GRACEFULLY? Much Ado for a Pipeline

• Outreaching the Law to Hurt the Allies

By Charles Maechling Jr.

WASHINGTON — The British trade secretary invoked the Protection of Trading Interests Act the other day as a step to prevent British firms from complying with the Reagan administration's embargo order on equipment sales for the Soviet gas pipeline. The trade secretary acted neither unreasonably nor in a spirit of ungrateful defiance.

The extraterritorial extension of United States law has always been an issue of contention with foreign governments, and on several occasions a serious irritant in relations. The foreign outrage over the latest order was entirely predictable.

This is no mere legal squabble. Regardless of whether European subsidiaries are wholly owned by U.S. interests, or whether licensees are dependent on U.S. technology, these are foreign companies in every sense of the word and exclusively subject to the laws of their own countries.

Britain is only one of a dozen trading partners of the United States that at various times have taken govern-mental action to protect their citizens and corporations from what they regard as infringements on their sovereignty. Many have passed legislation aimed at preventing their companies from obeying U.S. court decrees in antitrust and regulatory proceedings.

The French courts have even au-thorized temporary takeover of a French subsidiary to force it to fulfill a contract for truck assemblies that were barred by a U.S. Treasury Department order under the Trading Germany in early June was an enorwith the Enemy Act.

International law takes a dim view of attempts to control the actions of a foreign corporation in its host territory. The U.S. Supreme Court seems to agree. While confirming that the United States can control acts of its own citizens, including corporations, wherever they take place, and to a limited extent can even regulate acts of foreigners that have a substantial effect within the United States, it has never sanctioned overseas application of U.S. law to serve a U.S. national purpose. Only recently the Supreme Court ruled that the American subsidiary of a Japanese company was ex-clusively subject to U.S. law. The June 18 action was taken without consulting the European allies and with potentially devastating retroactive effect. Technically the Export Administration Act authorizes the president to act unilaterally and alone. In practice it has to be read in the context of a system of collabora-tion between 15 NATO nations plus Japan that for 30 years has been regulating the export of armaments, strategic materials and military technology to the East. Until now the pattern of U.S. policy has been never to take ufacture 68 more assemblies, in some embargo actions in an economic area crucial to its allies without prior consultation, let alone notification.

In this case the president's breach was made all the worse by first down-grading the pipeline issue to the point of not raising it at all during the Ver-sailles summit and meetings with Eu-ropean leaders in Bonn and London, and then springing it as a major for-eign policy initiative immediately after his return to Washington.

The embargo order is aimed at for-eign sales of both compressor station assemblies and the all-important turbine rotor, prohibited by an earlier order from being exported directly from the United States. Hardest hit would be John Brown of Great Britain, AEG-Telefunken of West Germany and Nuovo Pignone of Italy, which together are manufacturing 125 turbines under license from General Electric. Also affected are French and West German subsidiaries and licensees of General Elec-cases including rotors.

The basic contracts were signed months ago, and by this time a vast network of subcontractors, component manufacturers and parts sup-pliers have also been given binding commitments. More than $10 billion in business is now at stake, not to mention the prospect of additional contracts to build the East European legs of the pipeline. Apart from the issue of principle there is no way for the order to be made effective without disrupting significant segments of the European economy while increasing Western Europe's energy dependence on members of the Organization of Pe-troleum Exporting Countries.

As I was told on a recent trip to five European capitals, the Reagan order will certainly be nullified by the governments concerned — not at a political level and accompanied by noisy declamation, which would strain the alliance and make the president lose face, but at the less visible legal level on a case-by-case basis.

After incensing the allies in Western Europe, without harming the Soviet economy or affecting the internal situation in Poland, the Reagan administration is now exampleing to

So far the only sure casualties are the employees and stockholders of General Electric, Caterpillar Tractor, Dresser and other U.S. manufacturers, who are barred by an earlier order from making direct sales from the United States.

As the former head of the world's largest construction company, Secretary of State George Shultz certainly understands the full ramifications of the problem. If he wants to prevent the president from suffering a series of humiliating rebuffs by America's European partners, he should get the June 18 order rescinded as a quid pro quo for a tighter allied system of exports to the Soviet Union.

The writer, a resident associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, contributed this comment to

A Friendly Visit Wasted

HANNOVER - President Reagan's brief visit to West mous success. Since then, however, not only has its impact evaporated, but West German relations with the United States have never been worse.

The Reagan trip has backfired bad-ly. For the president's conduct in the last two months has created the impression that he deliberately concealed his true intentions toward West Germany during his trip here.

The hope now must be that George Shultz, the new secretary of state, can somehow repair the damage. But, given suspicions on this side of the Atlantic, his job will not be easy.

Reagan's two speeches here, one in West Berlin and the other in the Bundestag in Bonn, raised expectations that tensions between the United States and West Germany would abate. Evoking the shared experience of the allies since the end of World War II. Reagan even silenced leftwing critics of U.S. policy. But hardly had be returned to Washington than his oratory boomeranged, and attitudes toward him since have become increasingly bitter.

By Wolfgang Wagner

forced resignation of Alexander Haig as secretary of state, a development that caused something like a seismic shock amone West Germans sympathetic to the United States. Haig was admired and respected during the days when he commanded NATO forces in Western Europe. For both the West German government and public, he symbolized the U.S. defense commitment to the area.

Then came Reagan's decision to intensify his efforts to prevent the construction of the Soviet natural gas pipeline to Western Europe. The move is doubly depressing to West Germans who want to maintain close links with America because it will not succeed and it threatens to tarnish American prestige in the process.

In addition to the economic considerations, the political angle - at least as seen from a West German perspective - is that the Soviet Union has more to gain over the long term from mutually advantageous cooperation than from confrontation. The Reagan administration, seen from here, appears to be set on a collision course with the Soviet Union. Reagan's hostility to the pipeline had been known since he took office. What has been surprising has been his instransigence in a matter that was and still is open to conciliation.

On the eve of Reagan's visit, the newsmagazine Der Spiegel published a cover portrait of him above the caption, "The Unwanted Guest." It was an outrageous comment, such as had never before been aired against an American leader. Not even Leonid Brezhnev was so treated by the media when he came to West Germany. The remark proved to be wrong

Reagan was greeted with an enthus asm that reflects the depths of West German affection for America; the demonstrations staged against him were superficial. But the public mood has changed sharply. The alliance be-tween the United States and West Germany, vital to the foreign policies of both, could be in jeopardy. Secre-tary Shultz faces the critical challenge of rebuilding the partnership.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To Settle Patiently By Otto Graf Lambsdorff The writer is minister of economics of the Federal Republic of Germany.

A Family Dispute

WASHINGTON — The dispute reconsider. Above all, the harsh over the West European gas ally, British Prime Minister Margaret pipeline deal with the Soviet Union Thatcher, are an alarming signal of has reached a degree on both sides of discontent within the alliance. the Atlantic that should have been

The West Europeans are in agreement: The application of the princiis no more than that — now has to be settled in patient talks between the ple of extraterritoriality in U.S. government decisions is unacceptable to us. It violates our sovereignty. Therefore, we have to reject it.

This is the unanimous position in Bonn, London, Paris and Rome despite the content and clauses in civil law contracts between European and U.S. companies. Such private agreements, the concrete content of which still would have to be examined carefully, cannot and must not alter the legal basis of international viet Union; and that it is in the interest of Western Europe. We had reason to believe that the United States government, although not enthusiastic about this deal, would understand the European — expecially the Germanian relations between states. Above all, they must not retroactively block the execution of contracts that were concluded between the European companies and the Soviet Union long before the events in Poland. We shall have to continue talking about that with the U.S. administration.

In America it is asked whether by this gas deal Western Europe, and especially the Federal Republic of Germany, will not become dangerously dependent on the Soviet ous. The West European reaction to the embargo decision, however, should give the White House cause to Union. In Germany we have studied this issue extensively and carefully, and in 1979 the government arrived at the conclusion that there is no threat of such a dependence.

At the peak of gas deliveries from the Soviet Union, roughly 30 percent of our gas supplies will come from there. That will be about 5 to 6 percent of our total energy consumption.

A disruption of deliveries can never be fully excluded, even for technical reasons. But for such an event we are well prepared: We have sufficient gas storage capacities; we have a flexible West European gas pipeline network, which would allow us to switch the measures in the Western to other resources in the western parts of Europe, and we have the possibility of converting quickly from gas to coal and oil in an emergency.

For more than 60 percent of its energy consumption, the Federal Republic depends on imports. The more we can diversify our imports, the greater our security of supply. So the deliveries from the Soviet Union will contribute to this. According to our findings, there is no need to worry.

Apart from that, we look for further imports from other countries. The percentage of Soviet primary energy supplied will decrease with the exploration and production from new sources in other countries. But such new sources for our gas supply will not be available before 1990, especially not in Norway.

In the United States it is often thought that credits for the construction of the pipeline are subsidized by the government in Bonn. This is not true. The government does not grant credits or interest subsidies, either to the Soviet Union or to any other East bloc country. The eredit arrangements are made by private banks, without any state support.

Thus there is nothing suspicious in this deal. This should be understood. everywhere. Especially on the question of credit subsidies to Comm countries, there is no difference between Bonn and Washington.

Therefore we are in full agreement with the communique of the Versailles summit. This is why I have striven in many rounds of negotiations in recent weeks to reach an agreement within the OECD to increase interest rates and shorten maturities for credits to the Soviet Union. We finally succeeded: All OECD countries, including Japan, have reached a consensus according to which minimum interest rates, which were only 8.25 percent last year, will now be raised to 12.15 percent. This is an increase of about 50 percent, and the maturities are decreased from eight to five years. I believe that this is the better way to indicate to Moscow that the Western reply to Poland is not "business as usual"

We have no differences of opinion on the events in Poland. The declaration of NATO in January, 1982, was unanimous. But we do doubt that embargoes are an adequate answer. In my opinion, this applies to both the line and the grain.

Manila's Squatters

Regarding "Shacks Give Way to "City of Man" (IHT, July 3).

I am frankly confused as to what Pamela G. Hollic expects of a developing country — whether we ride the donkey, walk it, or carry it on our shoulders. In any case, it seems we are blamed for even trying to come to grips with the monumental task of nation building. The writer's nine lenting criticism points up the deplor-able conditions of Manila's illegal squatters and reproves the government for its efforts to relocate them.

The truth of the matter is that the government of the Philippines has embarked on a massive 10 year housing program to provide annually 10,000 new homes for the poor and the lower-middle classes. Much of the area that is being cleared of squatters is to serve as homesites.

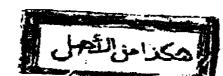

The government has successfully embarked on agricultural reform, giving the land to the tenants; urban land reform is its next objective, to remove wealth and privilege from the landlords and return the right of abode to every Pilipino family. JOSE A. ZAIDE. Embassy of the Philippines.

$3.25 Million Paid For Morse Painting

By Jo Ann Lewis

WASHINGTON — Daniel J. Terra, President Reagan's ambassador-at-large for cultural affairs and founder of the Terra Museum of American Art in Evanston, Ill., has paid $3.25 million for "Gallery of the Louvre," a painting by the 19th-century artist-inventor Samuel F.B. Morse. It is believed to be the highest price ever paid for a work by an American artist

Terra bought the 6-by-9-foot painting from Syracuse University, which received it as a gift in 1884. He said that negotiations with the university began in March and that the deal was closed this month.

"Gallery of the Lonvie," painted in the Louvre in 1832, depicts several Americans viewing 38 paintings in the museum's Salon Carrée. Morse shows himself as teacher, learning over a student's shoulder in the foreground; in the left corner are the novelist James Fenimore Cooper with his wife and their daughter, who was an art student of Morse's. Surrounding them are miniature reproductions of paintings by Rembrandt, Leonardo, Rubens, Raphael and Titian. The painting is in the tradition of "gallery" pictures painted between the 17th and 19th centuries.

The record price for an American painting sold at auction is $2.5 million for Frederic Church's "Icebergs" in October, 1979, at Sotheby

"Gallery of the Louvre" was done 10 years after Morse's "The Old House of Representatives," now in the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington. Both were conceived as exhibition pieces that Morse hoped peo-ple would pay admission to see. Both failed to produce the expected moone, leading Morse to refocus his attention on what had been a hobby in scientific research. He later produced the telegraph and the Morse code, which ultimately overshadowed his accomplishments in art. Term is a self-made multimillionaire and founder of Lawter International Inc., a chemical conglomerate. As finance chairman for Reagan's campaign, he raised $21 million. Terra owns other record-price paintings, including "The Jolly Flatboatmen" by George Caleb Bingham, which he bought at auction in 1978 for almost $1 million. He and his late wife, Adeline, began collecting American art in the early 1950s, and in 1980 opened the Evanston museum. Terra recently acquired a prime corner on Michigan Avenue in Chicago, where a new museum is to be built to house the Morse and other paintings in the Terra collection.

Three examples, by Gauguin, Epstein and Sheeler, illustrate the scope of draftsmanship.

Gauguin's drawing of "Meyer de Haan," which shows the Dutchman as a Satanic figure, is no more than a working sketch for a painting made as a companion to a selfportrait as Lucifer, part of the dec-oration of Marie Henry's inn at Pont-Aven where Ganguin and his friends stayed when working in Brittany. The conté crayon draw-ing of a "Rock Driller" by Epstein is the outline of a concept, the moment of birth of Epstein's seminal bronze "The Rock Drill" (1913), now in the Tate Gallery here. Sheeler combines the precisionism for which he was famed with the surreal influence of his friends among the New York Da-daists in a "Self-Portrait" in which he protrays himself with the ut-most delicacy, as a mere reflection in a window pane at night.

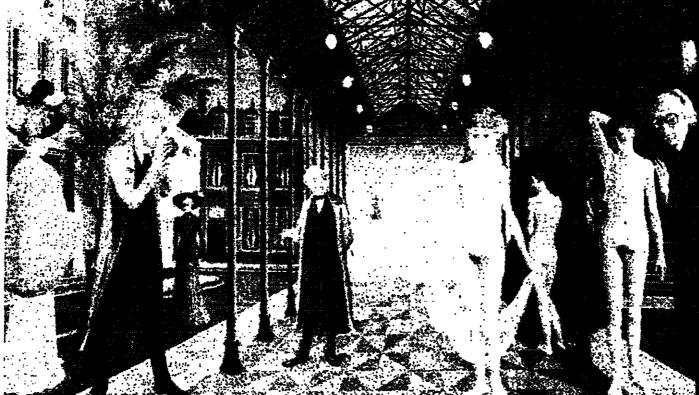

The British artists at the Hayward show themselves no less versatile and varied in their approaches. Nudes, portraits, landscapes and cityscapes there are in plenty;

Paul Delvaux's "Hommage à Jules Verne" mixes many of his unmistakable elements at the new Delvaux museum in Belgium.

Drifting Through Delvaux's Dreamy Scenes

By Rona Dobson

SINT IDESBALD, Belgium —

At the newly opened Paul Delvaux Museum, in a house by the sea near Ostend, such works are grouped in a casual profusion due as much to lack of space as to prodigality. Although it makes for an atmosphere of cocooned intimacy and separation from the world outside, there is no doubt that the paintings and other works would make a more gradual and reflective impact with more elbow room.

Work is going ahead to double the space we now have, but we particularly wanted to open in time for the summer visitors," said curator Charles van Deun, who is also president of the Paul Delvaux Foundation and a nephew by marriage of the artist.

The foundation, after some discouraging tangles with bureaucracy, gave up plans to build a mu-seum with public financing and instead bought a white Flemish house that most recently had been an auberge renowned for its pan-cakes. "From signing the deeds through renovation to installation of the paintings and opening to the public took just two months," van Deun said. "My entire family would have forgotten what I looked like." Van Deun lives in the neighborhood and so was able personally to oversee the work and organize the hanging of the 29 works, all donated by Delvaux from his private collection, with the promise of more to come.

Paul Delvaux has long had his ing which has been freed by the imagination from realistic detail, summer home near Sint Idesbald, a coastal village-cum-resort that in the 12th century was a thriving center for the flax trade with England. Since it opened, Delvaux, who will be 85 in September, has been a regular visitor, dropping in several times a week and often having lunch at the museum cafeteria under an umbrella on the terrace. "I feel at home here," he said contentedly.

The tables and umbrellas on the terrace, the green garden, the prox-imity of the beach all add a special allure; even the perspective of arches over the straight, paved nath from the front door to the garden gate seems pure Delvaux, lacking only a female apparition sleepwalking nude down its length with lamp or candle in hand. Visitors, oblivious of the painter looking on, march briskly toward the

Inside, the lighting is geared to the Delvaux atmosphere of mys-tery, stillness and night fantasies. The artist likes to create confusion mixing incongruous elements. It is part symbolism, part pure puzzle-picture. Against a back-ground of superbly structured temple columns and Roman hills, a nude reclines in the open on a French period sofa, a Brussels tram glides past.

Homey touches and evocative hints abound for those in the know: A night scene whose central figure is a demure, vouthful nude — a model appearing in several works in this collection — shows a stretch of cobbled street, a house and distinctive street lamp from the part of Brussels where Delvaux lives. A little suburban train that weaves through the same district in life becomes part of the pictured landscapes, as in "Le Cortege," where women nursing oil lamps the influence of such Flemish Exa formal park, unaware of the train chugging beside them.

A Jules Verne character, Professor Lindenbrook, is a Delvaux regular, but the meticulous portraits of a thin-faced man in granny glasses and white coat is strictly Delvaux's private vision of him "He collects all the Jules Verne books," said van Deun. "The family sometimes send him special copies they find with Verne's signa-ture." The professor is always fully dressed among nudes that are often real-life portraits. Delvaux men look on in smug security, armored in sober suits, at a stately parade of well-nourished, naked female flesh; but, despite their nudity, the women seem as decorously invulnerable as if surrounded by transparent walls. They are figures of awed, rather than erotic, fantasy, occasionally accompanied by adolescent male nudes. Another frequent subject is Delvaux's lively skeletons, which van Deun called his favorites: "They are not dead bodies, just people stripped of flesh carrying on in a normal, human way.'

The museum is open every day from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Earliest Work From '20s

SINT IDESBALD (Reuters) -Delvaux did not turn to surrealism until the mid-1930s, when he was almost 40. The earliest work in the new museum is a view of a Brussels railway station in post-Impres-sionist style, done in the 1920s before the artist came briefly under and Gustave de Smet.

Delvaux said two "shocks" led him to surrealism: "The first was a chance visit to a wax museum at the Brussels Fun Fair. I had been painting for 10 years in an Expressionist, naturalist manner and suddenly these wax figures struck a chord in me. The second impact was the Giorgio de Chirico exhibi-tion I saw in Paris, with its empty, silent suburbs inhabited by shadows. That was real poetry.

U.S. Gives Back 2 Dürer Works To E. Germany

The Associated Press

BERLIN - The U.S. government has returned two Albrech Dürer paintings "in remarkably good condition" to East Germany, 37 years after they disappeared from Schwarzburg Castle in U.S.-occupied Thuringia province, the East Berlin news agency ADN reported.

The paintings, done in about 1499, depict a wealthy Nuremberg citizen, Hans Tucher, and his wife. Felicitas. A 78-year-old American lawyer, their last owner, told a New York appeals court that he had bought the works from a U.S. soldier in 1946 for $450. The paintings are scheduled to be exhibited in Leipzig in September, ADN said.

Christie's Sales Dip Reflects Auction Ills

By Souren Melikian mational Herald Tribune

ONDON - The end-of-season Le figures released by Christie's confirm the extent of a crisis that was forecast in this column a year ago. Christie's worldwide sales for the season ending today totaled £172.63 million (now about $293.47 million), against £193.48 million for the 1980-81 season.

Nominally the drop is 10 percent. In real terms, it must be well over 15 percent given the continuing inflation in the United States, Britain and some other European countries. The score at Christie's is better than at Sotheby's, which, owing to its particular management crisis, registered a nominal drop of 25 percent and for the first time in its history is not releasing a full report.

Although Sotheby's is still leading, with net sales totaling £267 million, Christie's is clearly enjoying the situation. Its release gleefully points out that Christie's development program was entirely fi-nanced by the company's re-sources — a broad hint at Sotheby's indebtedness. It further con-gratulates itself for having cut the additional sale charge that buyers must pay on top of the knock-down price from 10 to 8 percent. The implication is that Sotheby's which still charges 10 percent lost some prospective vendors by being too greedy. But none of this can gloss over the basic facts — the setback. Where Christie's does score a point against Sotheby's is in its outspokenness. Its detailed figures provide an insight into the pattern of the crisis that Sotheby's skimpy interim report does not. The first noteworthy figures concern the comparative drop in the United States and Britain, where net sales totaled £67.585 million and £79.657 million respectively, compared with £74.03 million and £85.037 million last season. The deterioration was more marked in the United States, where the art market is traditionally more sensitive. The explanation that springs to mind — high interest rates — is probably the wrong one. These affect high-powered investors on both sides of the At-

The difference is not due to investors but to the medium-income category that buys for plea-sure and seems to feel far more insecure in the United States than in Europe. One field, however, is spared by the American fit of depression — American paintings, up from £4.69 million last season to £5.148 million. This market has been booming in the past few years and is the last category likely to give in. For the time being, it has lost nothing of its momentum. Contemporary paintings, recoverhave risen spectacularly from £3.69 million to £4.845 million. mostly due to the United States, according to one Christie's source.

By and large, departmental breakdowns indicate that topnotch categories have been worst affected. Old master paintings — a definition that included the 19th century up to but excluding the Impressionists and other avantgarde trends later in the century—have dropped from £29.88 million to £25.158 million, and Impressionists nosedived from £29.437 million to £17.096 million.

These figures can be read in many ways. The most obvious one is that great works are increasingly rare and that the enormous reserve prices slapped on the second or third-rate works that remain often turn buyers off - rightly so.

"We did not have the Poussin," said a highly placed Christie's source, referring to the £1.65-million masterpiece "Flight into Egypt" now owned jointly by the Simon Norton Foundation at Pasadena, Calif., and the Paul Getty Museum at Malibu. "But many world records were established." That's it in a nutshell: the record prices were paid, in a majority of cases, for paintings that were definitely not the artists' best.

Buyers are becoming painfully aware of this, and something has to give. Either the reserves go down or the buyers give up. This season, the latter option was the more frequent one, as reflected in the high bought-in ratio. Next season it will have to be the former. Reserves have become unrealistic and have to be slashed. It is no accident that the category that is most spectacularly up is one in which the highest quality still turns up at auction — Chinese and Oriental works of art. Net sales there have jumped from £5.2 million to

The also applies to European porcelain, which progressed nominally from £5.2 million to £5.5 million, almost keeping up with inflation. The more favorable score registered by Far Eastern art is probably to be accounted for by the better economic situation of Hong Kong and Japan, the two main outlets for top-quality Chinese porcelain.

The overall image that emerges is of a market not much affected by the economy but hit by internal troubles. The supply crisis is a fundamental problem with no real so-lution. The art of the past, once put away in museums, is not replaceable. The idea that one category can be substituted for another is a myth produced by people more accustomed to considering manufactured products than art. People go on buying, but not at the same prices. Prices have to be readjusted vendors' ambitions lowered, the whole structure thought out afresh. That is exactly what is happen-

Slurry Pipelines

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The House Public Works Committee, overniding vigorous opposition from the railroad industry, has passed legislation that would give developers of coal slurry pipelines the power to order the sale of property sought for rights-of-way. A similar measure is pending in the Senate Energy Committee.

The legislation could provide a boost to

The legislation could provide a boost to pipeline activity and create new competition for the railroads, which have a monopoly on coal hauling in some areas. Although it is nunsual for private companies to be given the power of eminent domain, it has been done before. The nation's railroads once had eminent domain, and some utilities and pipelines have it now.

Coal slurry legislation, which has been discussed for 20 years, has at times cleared various committees, and once it was even passed by the Senate. It has not yet become law, but its proponents say this year offers their best opportunity so far for success.

Approval of the bill in the House committee

Approval of the bill in the House committee late Wednesday night, by a vote of 25-21, is "an important step toward greater competition for the transportation of coal," said Carl E. Bagge, president of the National Coal Association. The odds that both houses of Congress will enact the measure in the current session appear to be slim, however, if only because few working days remain on the lawmakers" calendar.

Eight sharry pipelines are now on the drawing board or in some stage of construction, industry sources said, with most of them designed to hant pulverized coal from the interior of the country to electric plants and seaports.

Lined up in favor of the coal sharry legislation are the pipeline operators, electric ntilities, much of the coal industry and some consumer groups. Lined up against it are the railroads, environmentalists, farmers and Western states that fear a drain on meager water supplies. Operating a sharry pipeline requires great amounts of water to move the pulverized coal.

The passage of railroad deregulation legislation in 1980, with its emphasis on competition, makes sharry pipelines a new factor in the coalhanting business, said Edwin R. Anthony 3d, a spokesman for the National Coal Association.

"Utilities and other coal customers often are captive to a railroad," he said. "So the pipeline is an alternative to other modes of transportation."

is an alternative to other modes of transportation."

More than half of the electric power used in the United States comes from the burning of coal, he noted. "Transportation costs are a large portion of the total costs of buying and using coal," he said.

Richard E. Briggs, executive vice president of the Association of American Railroads, ar gued that sharry pipelines would not generate new business and would merely replace railroads as the carrier, causing usemployment.

Arbed last year lost 3.18 billion Luxenbourg france ($68 million), the

Gulf Plans Appeal on Cities Bid

Judge Charles R. Richey in the U.S. District Court Thursday signed a restraining order barring Gulf for at least 10 days from buying the Cities Service shares, a transaction that would have to-taled $5 billion.

The court acted in response to a request by the Federal Trade Commission for an order holding up the Gulf bid to buy Cities Service until the agency can study suspected antitrust implications of the merger, the third largest in U.S.

Gulf said Friday it "intends to contest the FTC action vigorously, but at the same time seeks to discuss with the FTC whether there is a reasonable basis for the prompt settlement of the action."

Gulf did not say how it plans to contest the FTC action. Gulf said it "could determine to terminate the offer at any time during the course of the litigation or the settlement discussion."

The FTC has 10 days to persuade the court to issue a formal injunction barring the merger until the FTC can conduct a complete investigation of the antitrust aspects of the huge merger.

Analysts speculated that Gulf's management may be uneasy about the finances of the proposed merger. Worries that the purchase price would strain Gulf's financial resources caused Gulf stock to decline and its credit-rating to be cut after the deal was announced in

In addition, analysts suggested, Gulf management may be con-cerned that the expected congressional repeal of a tax provision that can benefit merging compa-nies will adversely affect the merger with Cities Service.

According to a statement read in open court from Herbert Wachtell, a New York lawyer for Cities Serice, the Tulsa oil company was "unable all day to communicate with Gulf Oil" to discuss Wednesday's events, where the FTC voted unanimously to try to block the purchase of Cities Service by Gulf for antitrust reasons. The two companies had previously agreed upon the stock purchase and merger, so it had been viewed as a "friendly"

U.S. Carmakers Are Back in Black But the Market Remains Depressed

##PORTS

DETROIT — With second-quarter earnings out, the major U.S. carmakers appear somewhat healthier. General Motors Corp. and Chrysler Corp. earned more than had been expected, and Ford Motor Co.

had its first profit in a year.

But the earnings reflect a shrinkage of operations.

GM, which not so long ago had billion-dollar quarters, is not even expected to reach that total for the year. The industry is halfway through its fourth year of recession — depression is the term used here with little indication that the public plans to return to the showrooms soon.

Industry leaders and analysts expect that total sales this year will amount to as few as 8.2 million cars. Imports are expected to total 2.2 million, which would leave the domestic industry with barely 6 million cars, the least since 1961. And inventories stand at a 78-day supply; 60 days is the comfortable norm.

Even the glandular enthusiasm of Detroit's supersalesmen has been worn down. "I have no reason based on economics to become bullish on 1983," said E.T. Pappert, vice president of sales for Chrysler. "We've got exorbitant interest rates, and the highest unemployment since the Depression. What can you

Robert Lund, the unfailingly upbeat marketing vice president at GM, sounds puzzled by recent events. "When you look back, it shouldn't have happened the way it did," he said. "There's a lot of money out there and a need for cars and trucks."

There were, as usual, bright forecasts for 1982, based on an assumption that the economy would pick up by the spring quarter. But the upturn remains on the horizon. "The recovery has been six months away on a rolling basis for 30 months now," Mr. Pappert

Detroit, in fact, has not had a good year since 1978, then it sold 9.3 million cars. The gasoline shortages that followed the revolution in Iran the next year cut sales to 8.2 million cars, and the ensuing economic shamp reduced them to 6.5 million in 1980 and 6.2 million last year.

GM, despite retaining its 60-percent-plus share of the market for domestically made cars, is rated by industry analysts as the biggest loser in the downturn. The company introduced an unprecedented number of products, any one of which would have been a major effort in the past, to a stunning lack of reonse from buyers.

GM's new J-model subcompacts — the Cavalier from the Chevrolet unit, the J2000 from Pontiac, the Skyhawk from Buick, the Firenza from Oldsmobile and the Cimarron from Cadillac - have not sold. Fed Again Trims Its Discount Rate; U.S. M-1 Declines

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
WASHINGTON --- The Federal Reserve Board, for the second time in as many weeks, Friday cut the discount rate it charges on loans to member banks to 11 percent from 11½ percent.

The Fed said the rate reduction, effective Monday, was made "in light of market interest rates and relatively restrained money and credit demand." Wall Street analysts said the drop in the rate, which was announced after the market closed, apparently took investors by surprise.

On July 19, the Fed lowered the discount rate to 111/2 percent from 12 percent.

The Fed also said that the basic measure of the U.S. money supply, M-1, fell $800 million to $450.8 billion in the week ended July 21. Analysts had expected a modest decline in M-1, with estimates ranging from $500 million to $1 billion.

The $100 million drop in M-1 reported last Friday for the week ended July 14 left the measure around $500 million below the upper end of its 21/2 to 51/2 percent annual growth target range. The Fed revised last week's report to show a $200 million decline.

The Fed's reduction of the discount rate was requested by the Federal Reserve banks of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas, and San Francisco. The vote was 4-0, with three members absent.

The Fed move came as the Mellon Bank cut its prime rate to 15 percent from 151/2 percent, a rate that has become widespread through the banking industry.

Also, credit markets have continued to exhibit strength on optimism over Treasury borrowing ability and a declining federal funds rate.

Fed funds traded at from 114 to 111/2 percent Friday after an average Il.71 percent Thursday, deal-

Equally important, dealers said their finance rate remained quite positive, enabling them to carry larger inventories of Treasury paper. The dealer finance rate ranged from 9% to 10 percent, well below the yields on their inventory. "This means that dealers cur-

Repurchase agreements are collateralized loans. Dealers, in effect, pawn their government securities for brief periods with corporations and others interested in lending cash to them for a few days.

While the dealer finance rate was from 9% to 10 percent, the current 90-day Treasury bill yield is 10.5 percent, and the yield on the six-month bills is 11.35 per-

Greek Shipping Faces Problems

ATHENS — Greece's merchant fleet is fac-ing what government officials and shipowners agree is its most serious crisis since World War

A record 482 ships totaling 12.03 million gross registered tons, roughly a quarter of the fleet in tonnage terms, is laid up, and Merchant Marine Minister George Katsifaras said Friday the number will rise to at least 1,000 by the end of the year.

Friday the number will rise to at least 1.000 by the end of the year.

Prospects in both the tanker sector, which accounts for 37 percent of Greek registered tonnage, and dry cargoes, accounting for 61 percent, will remain bleak for the rest of this year and probably most of 1983, he said.

Of ships laid up, 133, comprising 8.37 million tons, are tankers, while 349, totaling 3.65 million tons, are dry cargo vessels.

Sources close to the Union of Greek Shipowners said they saw no prospect of an upturn in shipping business before next year.

A recovery, which would probably be led by tankers and trade in basic raw materials such as iron ore, might only be patchy and not necas iron ore, might only be patchy and not necessarily sustained.

The union said one factor that has eroded

The union said one factor that has eroused. Greek competitiveness on the world's depressed freight markets is an increase of more than 400 percent in Greek seamen's wages in the past eight years. The union is stepping up pressure to be allowed to hire more foreign seamen — the limit is currently 25 percent per Greek-registered ship — and negotiate separate wage agreements with foreign seamen's unions.

U.S. Authorizes Selling of Satellite Channels

By Penny Pagano

Los Angeles Tomes Service
WASHINGTON — The Federal Communications Commission has authorized the first sales of channels on communications satellites, a move that will allow private businesses to buy, rather than lease, slots on the satellites.

By a 6-1 vote Thursday, the commission approved plans by Hughes Communications Inc., RCA American Communications inc. and Western Union Telegraph Co. to sell a total of more than 100 satellite channels, also known as

The commission said that permitting immediate sales of individual channels will stimulate compontion in the industry by providing a new way for satellite owners to obtain capital. In addition, the FCC said that the decision will make it easier for new satellite opcrators to enter the field.

Satellite users will benefit, the commission said, by being assured permanent access to a designated channel at a fixed price. The FCC said that transponder sales also will help small users that are unable to afford present leasing arrangements; by buying a slot, they could qualify for tax benefits. To deny these arrangements would thwart the expressed needs of many consumers and satellite operators alike," the commission sion emphasized that it would rule on each satellite operator's sales proposal on an individual basis. Clay T. Whitehead, president of Los Angeles based Hughes Comconcept of transponder sales, said in a statement that the FCC's decision "will have a very positive effect on the expansion of new telecommunications services." In an interview, Mr. Whitehead predicted that initial purchasers will include cable TV pro-grammers that want a great deal of satellite capacity and want to be guaranteed satellite time when hey need it. . He also sees an even larger demand for channels from small businesses, particularly specialized carriers that cannot afford to build their own systems but want to offer alternative telephone and data transmission services. "That's Purchase prices for satellite channels are expected to range from $10 million to $15 million, compared with the current cost of about $1.5 million a year for leased time. With the addition of new and larger-capacity satellites, the number of available channels is expected to jump from the present 260 to 480 by 1984 and double that by 1987.

AT&T Request Denied

While the FCC staff said that it was convinced that a scarcity of channels is ending. Commissioner Joseph R. Fogarty said that he was unconvinced and that the commission should continue to regulate satellite space to protect the pub-

On another matter, the commission rejected a filing from American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to launch a new data communications network because the company failed to apply for the proper license. AT&T had planned to launch the new service shortly.

The commission also said that

FCC officials said that they expected AT&T to file immediately for the proper license and that they would rule on the matter by year-end.

An AT&T spokesman said the company is distressed by the FCC's action because the proposal had been at the FCC for five months. "If they had told us this five months ago, we could have cleared this up," he said.

French Funds Outflow Up

PARIS — Outflow of capital from France last year rose to 17.5 billion francs ($2.6 billion) from 7.5 billion in 1980, a French Ariof mentary report said Friday. It of-fered three reasons: Speculation against the franc following the Socialist victory; evasion of new tax-es by holders of French francs; and the attraction of the dollar resulting from last year's increase in international tension.

.Ioblessness In Japan at 16-Year High

TOKYO - Strains in Japan's economy were underlined Friday by figures showing a twofold increase in the first half balance-of-payments deficit and unemployment at the highest level in more than 16 years.

Despite the country's large surplus in trade, the balance of payments for the first half was in deficit by $6.67 billion dollars, three times that of the previous year, the Finance Ministry said.

Officials said the sharp decline in the yen's value on foreign exchange markets and the higher interest rates available overseas have caused an exodus of capital. In addition, foreigners have reduced their investments in Japan, especially on the weakening Tokyo

The deficit in the long-term capital account, a major measure of fund movements in and out of Japan, widened 44 percent from a year before.

The merchandise trade surplus during the half showed a 10 percent rise to $7.57 billion; a 3 per-

For June alone, the current account - which measures merchandise trade plus such "invisible" items as tourism and ship-ping, along with certain transfer payments — was in surplus by $1.74 billion, compared with sur-pluses of $1.32 billion a year earli-er and $76 million in May. The balance of payments in June regis-tered a $1.47-billion deficit, compared with a surplus of $1.27 billion in May and a $954-million deficit in June, 1981.

Officials showed concern at the June rise in unemployment to 2.3 percent and said the figure would be double that if Japan used the same definitions as those em-ployed by other advanced coun-tries. The officials said, for example, that someone working only one hour in the two weeks before the survey would have been count-the sarvey would have been countreed as employed.

The officials said the June jobless figure of 1.37 million, the highest since March, 1966, reflected the sluggishness of the economy, unable to rely for support on booming exports as in past years. Exports in June fell 7.3 percent.

ly. Chrysler is heavily dependent on its Japanese and French affiliates for products and technology. Ford draws on its successful foreign operations for capital, and even mighty GM is planning to im-port Japanese-made cars. Interest rates have had a double-barreled effect, according to indus-try leaders and analysts. On one side, the decline of inflation increased the real cost of borrowing to buy a car. On the other, consumers had easy access to highvielding investments for any spare cash they held.

There have been some bright spots for industry, however. Among them are GM's sleek new sports cars, the redesigned Chevro-let Camaro and the Pontiac Firebird. Production lines have been running overtime, and dealers had only a 29-day supply of Camaros and a 22-day supply of Firebirds.

Then there are the small pickup trucks, until now the exclusive province of Japanese manufactur-ers. GM's Chevrolet S-10, Ford's Ranger and Chrysler's Dodge Rampage, all new offerings, in-creased domestic truck sales 19 cent drop in exports was more percent during 1982's first half than offset by a 4.4 percent drop in while imported truck sales fell almost 18 percent.

Chrysler also chalked up a small success with its revival of the convertible, booking 20,000 orders for the Chrysler Lebaron and Dodge 400 in six months. It had originally planned to make only 3,000.

This year's poor sales are not likely to produce the enormous losses of 1980, when the sudden drop struck companies staffed for all-out production. The domestic industry that year lost a combined $4 billion, including the first yearly loss for GM since the 1920s. Last year, the combined loss was $1.3 billion, and 1982 is expected to bring a modest profit — the result of the layoffs, plant closings and leaner inventories, as well as higher car prices. Auto executives insist that fundamentals will eventually force buyers back into the market. The average age of cars in use is approaching seven years. Some say there is a "pent-up demand" for as many as 8 million cars, the number that would have been purchased, they calculate, if sales had fol-lowed historical trends. Others, however, speculate that some basic consumer buying habits have changed,

The outlook for Japanese imports, which amount to about 80 percent of all imported cars, is also cloudy. The Japanese are heading into the optional third year of their "voluntary" restraint agreement.
"The Japanese will sell all they can bring in," Mrs. Keller said. "The only question is whether they will sell them at $6,000 each or $2,000."

The British banks had cut their base rates, the key to all bank lending in this country, on July 14 from 12.5 percent to 12 percent.

The announcement of slightly easier credit costs had little affect on the London Stock Exchange as brokers were closing up for the end of the month when it came. But Sir Terence Beckett, director general of the Confederation of British Industry, which represents almost all of British business, hailed the move, "We welcome the further easing of cost pressures of business provided by the cut in in-terest rates," he said in a state-

By Calvin Trillin. 206 pp. $10.95

1978 has been writing a "humor column" for The Nation, is quick to recognize the risks of his assignment: In modern America, anyone who attempts to write satirically about the events of the day finds it difficult to concoct a situation so bizarre that it may not actually come to pass while his article is still on the presses." What is even more bizarre is the very notion of humor in the solemn pages of The Nation, a contradiction in terms if ever there was one. Yet, as many of the four dozen pieces collect-ed in "Uncivil Liberties" attest, Trillin has brought it off.

At the outset, Trillin defined the column as "a thousand words every three weeks for saying whatever's on my mind, particularly if what's on my mind is marginally ignoble." He granted himself broad journalistic license: "I must admit that in these col-umns I haven't made a fetish of the old traditions of journalism - the tradition, for instance, of covering events only when they actually occur. . . I am also free from what-ever traditions journalism might retain in the area of fairness and civility." Thus well armed with wit and malice, he went right to work, conjuring up in his very first column "a remarkably prescient H.L. Mencken quotation that seems to have been making the rounds of Washington egghead circles lately":

"On those dark moments when I fear that the Republic has trotted before these weary eyes every carnival act in its repertoire, I cheer myself with the thought that someday we will have a president from the deserts of the Deep South. . . . The president's brother, a prime specimen of Boobus Collumnus Rubericus, will . . . gather his loutish companions on the porch of the White House to swill beer from the bottle and snigger over whispered barnyard jokes about the darkies. The president's cousin, LaVerne, will travel the Halleluyah circuit as one of Mrs. McPherson's soldiers in Christ praying for the con-version of some Northern Sodom's most Satanic pornographer as she waves his work — well thumbed — for all the yokels to gasp at... The president's daughter will record these events with her box camera... The incumbent himself, cleansed of his bumpkin ways by some of Grady's New South hucksters, will have a charm comparable to that of the leading undertaker of Dothan, Alabama."

That paragraph, in which Trillin can fairly be said to have out-Menckened Mencken, became an instant classic - as well as a source for further irreverence in subsequent col-umns, in which Trillin took on such weighty matters as journalistic credibility and the protection of sources, and reduced them to the puddles of silliness they so often can be. Wrapping himself in a manue of feigned self-righteousness, he took on one-byone the members of the press who questioned the authenticity of the Mencken quote, including one who clearly had found him out: "When I told one of them, Theo Lippman Jr. of The Baltimore Sun, that I had seen the quotation typed on a piece of paper rather than printed in a book or magazine, he asked if the piece of paper had been in a typewriter at the time. Such are the excesses of skepticism that respectable members of our trade have been driven to in this post-Watergate era."

As should by now be evident the temptation to quote Trillin is entirely irresistible. On the grounds that humor yields more to quotation than analysis, I offer these further gems from the Trillin lode:

 "The deduction for charitable contributions is simply the govern-ment's way of indicating that rich people are in a better position than poor people to decide which eleemosynary institutions are deserving of the taxpayers' support. Why would coal miners be required to share the cost of a stockbroker's gift to the St. Paul's School's boathouse fund? The laws providing tax shelters reflect the strong philosophical com-mitment of the Founding Fathers, particularly Alexander Hamilton, to the principle that the public good would be served if dentists owned cattle ranches "

• "The presence of Carter in the White House, of course, is based on the belief that the proprietor of any middle-sized agribusiness can rise to the presidency if he simply works hard, studies at night with his wife to broaden their cultural horizons and keeps a low profile during civil-rights disputes.

 "Although a full week has passed since First Lady Nancy Reagan re-sumed her regular schedule, the White House remains unsuccessful in its efforts to still rumors that the cause of her brief absence was an operation for the surgical removal of her adoring

As these passages make clear, the amiable Trillin can be a very tough customer. He is never more so than in this imagined passage from the undergraduate Harvard diary of Arthur Schlesinger Jr.: "Dear Diary, Today I asked those cool Kennedy boys again if I could play in their touch football game on the quad and they said again that I ware supply and they said again that I was a wonk and a weenie and a wimp and a grind and walked like a duck. I told them that someday would be a famous historian and if they ever let me play with them then I would write whatever they wanted me to write." Poor Schlesinger may never again be seen in public.

Malice may not be nice in political humor, but it is necessary — and Tril-lin possesses it in ample measure. The persona he has adopted as humor columnist is that of a "sausage-eating slothful crank" who views the world with unflagging irritation and a pro-found understanding that things can, and will, only get worse. In his jaun-diced view. Julie and Tricia Nixon looked pretty terrific by comparison with Nancy Reagan, and Billy Carter made him yearn for Donald Nixon.

The good old days really were better. But with Trillin around it is all a good deal more bearable. Even in his less-inspired efforts — these tend to be the ones in which his wife and daughters figure, further proof that family matters are best kept that way - he is perceptive, furny and iconoclastic. There's nothing quite so refreshing as a grump, and Calvin Trillin is clearly a grump for the ages.

U.S. Swimming Hopes Still Hinge on Caulkins

GUAYAQUIL, Equador - The last time U.S. swimmers attended a major international meet, Tracy Cauthins was the star of a resurgent team of American women.

Four years later, U.S. hopes of upsetting the strong East German contingent next week at the World Swimming Championships hinge beavily on the 19-year-old from Nashville, Tenn, who has won more national titles than any American swimmer in history.

Thirty-nine times since 1977, Caulkins has reached the final wall first in individual events at national championship meets, which are held twice a year. Because of the U.S. boycott of the 1980 Olympics at Moscow, the last time American swimmers challenged the world in a major meet in an Olympic (50-meter) pool was the 1978 World Championships at Caulkins, then 15, won three individual gold medals, one silver and two relay golds as the U.S. women won nine golds to one for the East Germans. In the 1976

No Shocks Expected

There's little chance that Caulkins will shock anyone in the 1982 World Championships. World re-cords in the events Caulkins dominates in the United States — the 400-meter and the 200-meter individual medleys — are held by East Germans: Ute Geweniger and Petra Schneider, respectively.

About 1,200 athletes from 56 countries are in this Pacific coast city of I million for the championships. Each country in the swimming competition at Guayaquil's Alberto Vallarino Pool is allowed a maximum of two swimmers in each individual event.

The five world record-holders on the U.S. team are Craig Beards-ley in the 200 butterfly, Mary T. Meagher in the women's 100 and 200 butterfly, Steve Lundquist in the 100 butterfly, Steve Lundquist in the 100 breaststroke Rowdy Gaines in the 100 and 200 freestyle, and Kim Linehan in the women's 1,500 freestyle Oakland's Rickey Henderson takes off for second on his way to another stolen base. With a steal against Minnesota on Thursday, he has 96 in 101 games - and is 22 shy of Lou Brock's record.

The Secrets of a Retired Base Thief

Brock Used a Stopwatch, Movies — and a Sore Hand

By Ira Berkow New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - When Lou Brock broke the major league base-stealing record for a single season with 118 steals in 1974— the record Rickey Henderson of Oakland seems certain to break this season — he was 35 years old. At an age when most baliplayers are on their last legs. Brock was romping like a coll.

His legs were still good, but his head was even better, and it was the latter that made the difference. Brock mulled and analyzed and plotted the entire art of larceny on the bases. He figured to the 10th of a second the throws and movements of pitchers and catchers, the idiosyncracies of first basemen, how many feet he needed for a He was revolutionary. He clocked the pitchers' movements with a stopwatch from the dugout, he even took films of the pitchers. Once, during spring training, he set up a camera along the foul line to look over Don Drysdale. "What are you doing?" asked

He was saying he had learned some base-stealing techniques from discussions with Maury Wills, who had broken Ty Cobb's base-stealing record that had last-ed 47 years. Wills stole 104 bases in 1962. He was 29, also a relativeadvanced age for a base thief. Brock had heard that Wills had little black book detailing the most arcane intelligence about "He was supposed to have inforpitchers is that they are in one of two categories, the two-motion throw to first or the three-motion throw. Soon as you can read the pitcher well enough, you can elimi-nate the catcher. He won't have a chance of nailing you." Henderson Is Ahead

Brock said Henderson, at 23, is ahead of both him and Wills concerning information on base steal-"Rickey came through St. Louis, where I live, over the winter," said Brock, "and we had dinner. One thing we talked about was that you can have no fear of failure if you're going to steal a lot of bases. You have to have a certain arrogance.

"Something else, you've got to love it. You have to love the spotlight - the visibility factor, I call Rickey has that passion. It was like when I was doing TV broad-casting and I asked George Brett, when he was trying to hit .400, when he gets to the ballpark. He said. Get to the park? I never want to leave."

The Overlooked Hand

Another point, said Brock, that is often overlooked in base stealing the pain factor for the hand. "You brace your slide — if you slide feet first — with your hand. Pretty soon, the pain is terrible. At one point in 1974, I could hardly hold a glass of water.

"A few years ago, Ron LeFlore had 97 stolen bases, and then leaned his hand against a wall and broke his wrist. When I saw Omar Moreno in 1980, his right hand was twice the size of his left. "Rickey usually slides headfirst, and that could cause even more damage to the hand. I remember I saw him last year and I said, 'I just have one question for you: How's your hand?' No one had asked him that question. He just smiled." Brock seems early on in his career to have had a bent for the analytical, and to appreciate the little thing that might mean a lot. When he was traded from the Cubs to St. Louis in 1964, the Cardinals had a reputation for sound fundamentals. Out in left field, he noticed that the third baseman, Ken Boyer, would put his glove behind his back and wiggle it. Brock would move this way or that, following the wiggle. "I thought Boyer was brilliant," said Brock, "because I always seemed to get a better jump on the ball. So a few years later, wanting to pass it on to some of our younger outfielders, I asked him what the process was. "He looked at me, and asked, 'What process?'

Navratilova Wins but Pulls a Muscle

SYDNEY - Martina Navratilova defeated Bettina Bunge, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, in a women's indoor tennis tournament here Friday night, but she may be forced to drop out because of a hip injury.

Navratilova pulled a muscle in the final set of the match. Afterward, she said she would not make a decision on continuing until further treatment Saturday.

Earlier, Navratilova threatened not to return to Australia because of a heckling incident during her 6-3, 6-3 first-round victory over Sue Barker. A male speciator repeatedly applauded the American's errors. "There is always a big hero in a crowd," said Navratilova. "Something like that makes you think about not coming back here again."

In other matches Friday night, Chris Evert Lloyd defeated Evonne

Goolagong Cawley, 6-3, 6-1, and Andrea Jaegar beat Barker, 6-0, 6-0.

Pecci Eliminates Vilas in First Round

NORTH CONWAY, N.H. - Guillermo Vilas, the top seed, fell prey to jet lag and the hot racket of Victor Pecci and was eliminated Thursday in the first round of a Grand Prix tennis tournament, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2.

The other three top seeds - Ivan Lendl, José-Luis Clerc and Eliot Teltscher - all advanced. Lendl beat Juan Aquillera of Spain, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3; Clerc beat Ken Flack of the United States, 6-0, 6-4; and Teltscher in a second-round match, eliminated Mike Myburg of South Africa, 6-3,

Richard Promoted to Top Farm Club

HOUSTON -- Pitcher IR Richard, making a comeback after a life-threatening stroke two years ago, will move from the Houston Astros' Class A Daytona Beach farm club to their AAA team in Tucson, Ariz, the club has announced.

In five starts for Daytona Beach in the Florida State League, Richard has compiled a 3-0 record with 19 strikeouts in 33 innings and a 1.91 carned run average.

"We have been extremely encouraged by the way J.R. has pitched so far in Florida, and we feel this is the appropriate time for us to move him up," said Al Rosen, the Astros' president and general manager. "We view this as the logical progression and the next step toward the day when J.R. Richard can pitch again in the maior leagues

Indianapolis Invests in Sports to Change Image pated here, but the real star of the show has and most functional sports facilities in the na-

Were you aware that Indianapolis is bigger than New Orleans? San Francisco? Honolatu? And many other cities that are worth visiting? Most people don't know that because Indianapt biosis people aon't know that the testing in the list is such a lick town. But it just proves that bigger is not better. Bigger is just bigger.

Les Angeles Times Service INDIANAPOLIS — This is a city that is mad as hell and not going to take it anymore. Because of its location near the center of the country and the convergence of its railroads, Hoosiers have long called their largest city and capital the Crossroads of America. But to the rest of the country, it is India-noplace, Nap Town.

By reputation, it wakes up once a year when it hears, "Gentlemen, start your engines." The rest of the time it is an OK place to live, but you wouldn't want to visit. As the story goes, a flight attendant, upon landing here once, an-nounced to her passengers, "You have just ar-rived in Indianapolis. If you wish, you can turn your watches back 25 years."

The Core of It

But Indianapolis is fighting back. It even has a battle cry. You can't go anywhere in this city without seeing a poster, bumper sticker, T-shirt or button that reads, "Move Over New York. Apple is Our Middle Name." At the core of the Little Apple's efforts to become big time is a controversial $78-million, 63,000-seat domed stadium, scheduled for completion in 1984 and counted on by civic leaders to lure professional football and base-Meantime, according to Mayor Hudnut's

Square Arena, which opened in 1974 and is the home of the Pacers of the National Basketball Association, Indianapolis has spent approximately $136 million on sports facilities in the City officials say approximately half the bill has been footed by the private sector, including nearly $45 million from Lilly Endowment Inc. of Indianapolis. With contributions from other nonpublic sources, taxpayers are responsible for only about 34 percent of the cost. Nonetheless, in times of recession, some people here question whether becoming the amateur sports capital is worthwhile. Although the unemployment rate here is 9 percent, the same as the national average, it is close to 20 percent among minorities, many of whom live within a javelin throw of the new swimming and track stadiums on the Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis campus. About 150 members of the Black Action Committee marched from downtown to the track and field stadium Saturday night protesting that recent construction projects have not eased high unemployment among minorities. They carried signs that read, "We Love Sports, But We Need Jobs," but their chants were drowned out by the cheers of a crowd of more than 14,000, the largest ever to see track and field competition in Indiana.

Unqualified Success

Seldom is heard a discouraging word in Indianapolis these days. By all accounts, the National Sports Festival, which has labored in anonymity since its conception in 1978, has been an unqualified success. Many athletes expected to compete in the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, including long jumper Carl Lewis, diver Greg Louganis and heavyweight boxer Tyrell Biggs, have partici-standards for the city's 2,800 parking meters were given a new coat of silver paint.

Ken Sitzberger, a former Olympic diving champion here to do commentary for ABC, returned for the first time last week since he was a student at the University of Indiana at Bloomington almost 20 years ago.

"I barely recognize the place," he said.
"When I used to come here, it was as dirty as Pittsburgh. Now, it practically sparkles." Stunned by Support

The U.S. Olympic Committee, which sponsors the festival, was cautiously optimistic when Indianapolis was chosen as the site over Colorado Springs and Philadelphia, but it has been stunned by the support from the city. Gate receipts for the 1981 Sports Festival in Syracuse were a record $450,000. Indianapolis officials sold $539,000 in advance tickets and expect receipts to surpass $1 million before the 11 days of competition end Saturday night. "We've got this town so psyched up we could sell tickets to tiddlywinks," said Sandy

Knapp, executive director of the Indiana Sports Corp. The corporation is a nonprofit entity established two years ago to attract athletic events. Besides the festival, major amateur competitions held here this year were the U.S. Figure Skating Championships and the U.S.-Soviet Union Pan African track and field meet. The U.S. Swimming Federation's long-course championships come later this summer. "We don't have mountains or a seashore so we have to become destination-oriented," Knapp says. "We have to give people a reason to come here." Cynics suggest that Indianapolis' yearlong effort to assure success for the festival is nothing more than a well-orchestrated campaign to convince the National Football League that the city will support a team. While civic leaders say there is more to it than that, they do not deny that is one of their incentives.

ART BUCHWALD 'Have a Lousy Day!'

WASHINGTON — The trou-ble with most people is that how much traffic I'll have to fight they never seem to leave well enough alone. The other day I said to H. Boyer Royal:

"Have a nice day." Are you asking me a question?" he wanted to know. "No, I'm telling you."

"What business of yours is it what kind of day

I have?" of any of my business. As a matter of fact, I really don't care what your day is like. I was trying to say goodbye to Buchwald you in a friendly

"Then why didn't you just say, Time is like a fashionable host, that slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand, and with his arms outstretch'd as he would fly. grasps in the comer, welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out

"I don't know why I didn't say at." I told him. "It never occurred to me."

People always tell you to have a nice day, but they never tell you how to have one."

"I imagine they assume that each person should know how to do it. A nice day to somebody may not necessarily be a nice day to another. The farmer may want it to rain: a lady who just bought a new bathing suit may want the sun to shine. Having your kid away from home could be a nice day for some people, while others will settle for a parking place in town. When you tell someone to have a nice day, you're not responsible for how it "Has it ever occurred to you," Royal said, "that when you tell someone to have a nice day you might be putting a curse on him?" "I don't believe it has. Would you care to explain yoursel?" "Well, until you said it to me I wasn't giving any thought to what kind of day I was going to have. I was going to take it as it came. But now that you've planted the idea in my head, I'm going to keep to get home. And when I get to the front door I'll be nervous about what mood my wife is in. I know the odds of having a nice day are stacked against me, but until you wished me one, I was able to ignore it. People should not say to anyone. 'Have a nice day,' when they don't know what that person is up against. It's like putting the evil eye on them."

"I believe you're reading too much into my goodbye," I told him. "When someone says, 'Have a nice day, he is only wishing you good luck "

"Then why doesn't he say, 'May the road rise up to meet you and may the wind be always at your back, and may you get to heaven before the devil knows you're

"Because most people are in a hurry, and that takes too long to say, unless you're leaving an Irish bar. Why are you making such an issue of a simple thing like this?"

"I guess it's a question of sincerity. Everyone tells you to have a nice day. But how many people do you know who really care if you do or not?"

"Royal, you're a cynic." "I am not. I know a department store, and they train their employees to say 'Have a mice day' to

'Well, wouldn't you rather have them say that than to tell you what's really on their minds?"

"No, I think people should level with you. They should tell you what's on their minds. How can you know whom to trust when even the people who work in the post office tell you to have a nice

. Well, Royal, I'm sure you realize that, when I wished you a nice day, I meant it from the bottom of my heart."

"How can I be sure you weren't just trying to get rid of me?"

"Because I never say it to somebody unless I truly like and admire them. If you don't want to have a nice day that's all right with me. too."

"There you go," Royal cried.

Are We Ready for Computer Operas?

By Donal Henahan

NEW YORK - I hope I am not being disloyal to my own culture when I confess that I do not understand the appeal of electronic games. I remain unmoved by the sight of one Pac person consuming another. The notion of tiny planets bustling about pretending to destroy other tiny planets fails to stir my competitive juices. And playing hockey or soccer on a small screen seems some thing less than an athlete's feat. To put it plainly: Computerized games strike me as the modern young wastrel's equivalent of hanging around the corner pool room or pitching pennies until all hours under the streetlights.

And yet, child of our time, I have for years been fascinated by computers, especially by their persistent efforts to turn themselves into sentient, creative individuals. It comes as a slight shock to realize that 25 years have gone by since Lejaren Hiller, a chemistry professor at the University of Illinois, began working with L.M. Isaacson on programming the Illiac computer to compose music: the "Illiac Suite" and "Computer Cantata," among other titles. It was awful stuff, of course, but even a computer has to begin somewhere. So, would it now surprise you to learn that computers are composing whole operas? Possibly not, since we have all seen computers doing much more wonderful things in those dazzling new sci-fi and comic-book movies. With my own eyes, I have watched a screen full of interlocked hexagons turn instantaneously into exploding parallelograms and back again. Not since I was given a kaleidoscope for my fifth birthday have I been so delighted and astounded.

Flatty Revolting

Nevertheless, even a jaded observer might be taken aback to discover that computers at the University of Wisconsin under the guidance of Prof. Sheldon Klein, a linguist and professor of computer science, have composed the words and music for an opera enti-tled "Revolt in Flatland." The work is based on "Flatland," a 19th-century fantasy by Edwin Abbott about a two-dimensional world - an ingenious choice of subject, you must admit, for the flat screen of a computer termi-nal. And surely its intentional lack of depth cannot be held against "Revolt in Flatland" when so many fully staged operas by human composers manage to achieve nothing better.

The cheerful word that computers have moved into the field of opera comes through an article by Kevin McKean in Byte, a computer trade journal. Despite C.P. Snow's famous complaint that scientists and humanists inhabit separate cultures and can barely speak to one another, Klein has been making serious efforts to close the gap. In the early 1970s he and his students devised a program that enabled a computer to write 2,100-word mystery stories in 19 seconds each, and they followed with a program for creating Russian fairy tales. From there, it was a logical step to asking the computer to compose an opera.

The article explains: "A simulator generates the plot in a special symbolic language devised by the group, then translators turn the symbolic plot into words, music and moving pictures of the action." The music, we are told, was generated by an Apple computer; other functions take place on a Terak. The simulation language, whose name is written as five vertical slashes and pronounced "barbar," is based on UCSD Pascal, one of many languages in which computers and computer ntists converse among themselves.

It is difficult to guess from this brief description what Apple-generated music might sound like. But in theory computers can be programmed to write "music" in the style of any period. If you wanted something that sounds like Mozart, for instance, you would feed into the machine as many 18th century rules and practices as you can gather. The machine would digest all the parameters or variables given to it — rules of harmony and counterpoint, sonata and fugal forms, rhythmic formulas, modulations, melodic shapes, and so on. It would then be able to give back sequences of notes that might with luck appear on paper like something Mozart dropped under his writing table.

Might Resemble Music

The more sophisticated the computer and the program - and the more skilled the programmer — the more the results might resem-ble genuine music. This computer-generated score could then be performed on instruments of the program's choice. In wellequipped electronic-music laboratories, the more usual approach nowadays is to have computers produce the musical data and the sounds as well, through a digital-analogue converter that can synthesize virtually any imaginable sound or combination of sounds.

For a couple of decades now, computers have had this capacity to generate what other computers would recognize as musical scores and to pass on the data to synthesizers for translation into sound. For some time, too, computers have been able to string words and

Geometric Progression

Klein admits that "Revolt in Flatland" is not. "Don Giovanni" In fact, he says, "I'm not keen on showing it because, to be perfectly frank, the music is superb but the action is quite dull." Does that disqualify it on today's opera market? Hardly. But the plot as spelled out by the scientist does seem to lack something: "Most of what's happening in the current version is that little squares and triangles and polygons are moving slowly from one house to another. The action only happens occasionally, when they meet." Klein is too modest, of course: I have seen half a dozen new operas recently that had duller scenarios and far less character motivation.

to point us toward golden horizons: A new program being devised for "Revolt in Flat-land" will automatically omit all boring scenes. A future populated by many extremely short operas may be beckoning. In fact, can we be certain what would result if the new "Flatland" program were to be put to work screening the standard operatic repertory? Who knows how much would be left of, say, "Il Trovatore" or "Parsifal"? But at the moment, Klein admits, the "Flatland" program finds it difficult even to criticize or edit itself. "Potentially, our opera could be five hours long, like a real opera, but at the end there would be nobody watching." At least the computer recognizes it has a problem.

Aiready the computer-composer has begun

Farfetched and naive though current theories of computer participation in the arts may seem, we must be careful not to dismiss the idea of educable and ultimately creative machines. Experimental projects such as the ones Klein and his students are carrying out may not lead anywhere we care to follow, but no serious attempt to figure out how the creative mind works is a trivial enterprise. Natalie Debn of Yale University, a researcher whose specialty is helping computers try to generate good narrative prose, explains her goal: "I'm trying to construct a model of what makes people creative. If my model is correct, then my program should be able to make up interesting stories."

A point to be considered, however, is that the computer must be programmed by human minds of the widest sympathies and artistic understanding or its narrative will remain forever a mechanical plot. There is never an excess of such gifted people. Perhaps, in some brave future, the production of art will be the province of the many humanoids working in disciplined teams, computer craftsmen who will remain as anonymous as the builders of Chartres Cathedral. But for now, my own attention to music or any other art has to be based on an implicit trust that there is an artist in there somewhere trying to express something. Sorry, but nothing else computes.

Powers objected to the designation of the African Fund, the choice of the executor. She said she had met employees of the fund in Kenya and considered them "neophytes." Powers, a close friend of Holden's for several years, received a $250,000 bequest in his will. She recommended that the $80,000 go to the William Holden Wildlife Fund, which she has organized with the help and approval of Holden's partners in the Kenya game ranch. The judge Robert S. Mulliken, a Nobel Prize-winning scientist from the University of Chicago, is the 1983 winner of the United States' highest award in chemistry. Mulliken, will receive the Priestley Medal, awarded annually by the American Chemical Society, at the group's national meeting next March. The scientist, who worked on the Manhattan Project to build the first atomic bomb, was awarded the 1966 Nobel Prize in chemistry for his work on the motion of molecules. He has been at the University of Chicago for most of his academic career... The Norwegian actress Liv Uflmaan was named winner of the International Platform Association's 1982 Eleanor Roosevelt Award for her work with UNICEF and the International Rescue Committee. The award will be presented Aug. 6 during the association's annual convention in Washington.

The actress Stefanie Powers is coposed to giving $80,000 from the estate of William Holden to the African Fund for Endangered Wildlife, and she's fighting it in Fagan of County Kerry, Ireland, was the guest prestorest const. it said, there was no proof that Michael Fagan - who scaled a fence. climbed a drainpipe, entered the the queen's bedchamber and struck up a conversation with her July 9 before being led away — was related to Patrick.

> Bob Hope, star of many "road" films with the late Bing Crosby. has a road he can call his own in northwestern Miami. The City Commission agreed to rename a stretch of Northwest Ninth Avenne "Bob Hope Road," at the request of the National Parkinson Foundation and the University of Mismi School of Medicine. For 25 years. Hope has been honorary chairman of the Miami-based foundation, which is seeking a cure for Parkinson's disease.

Archibald MacLeish, in an interview shortly before his death, said he almost joined the Communist Party in the 1930s because he was infuriated by President Herbert Hoover's attitude toward the Depression. The poet, who was interviewed at his farm in western Massachusetts before his death earlier this year at age 89, told American Heritage magazine that he had "never seen anything that even remotely approached the ma-ery and anguish and horror of the Great Depression. Things I thought just couldn't happen in a human society were happening.

But he rejected communism, he said, because "down deep I hated the communist conception of the relation of the state to the people itgoverned."

Liberace, who was known as Wladzui Valentino Liberace when he lived in Milwaukee as a boy, returned to give his first home town concert in four years. In an airport news conference, the flamboyant pianist, 63, spoke of his youth and the time he had gotten lost and wandered onto the grounds of the Wisconsin State Fair. Police found him and took him home in a motorcycle sidecar. "I thought that was terrific," he said. "I wanted to get lost every day."
